GAS TAX INCREASE FACES SURE DEFEAT IN SENATE TODAY

Measure Before Senate Today
For Final Action On Special
Order of Business

TO FORCE CONFERENCES

Whole of Governor's Tax Program Now Hing in
the Balance

By G. Everett Doying
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
HARRISBURG, Mar. 27.—(INS)—Its defeat all but certain, the $400,000
gas tax increase was before the Senate today for final action as special
order of business.

Continuance of unemployment relief
for 1,700,000 needy Pennsylvanians
and the Administration's fiscal set-up for the next biennium both hung in the balance as the time for a roll call nearly.

The Federal Government has declared that its allocations to Pennsylvania stop on April 15 unless the state acts to provide part of needed funds before that time. The two-cent gasoline tax increase is carried in the Earle budget as the bulwark of emergency imposts designed to provide $5-600,000 monthly for the jobless.

Republican majority leaders asserted flatly they had enough votes, and more to spare, to defeat the Eberhart-er Bill. They planned to administer a crushing defeat to the measure to kill the fifth of Gov. George H. Earle's $203,000,000 new tax program and force conferences looking toward a compromise on fiscal matters.

Democratic leaders, although unwilling to predict the outcome, haltingly admitted they saw little hope of halting the G. O. P. juggernaut. With four members absent from the Senate's roll of 50, only 21 negative votes were needed to defeat the measure. Republicans answered for 28 of the 46 votes present. A constitutional majority of 26 votes is needed to pass any measure.

Decision of Republicans to slice out a huge section of the Administration tax program as a means of forcing a compromise seems as the Democratic House finished pushing virtually all the administration tax bills across the hall to the upper chamber.

The G. O. P. pointed its compromise at a retail sales tax and at reducing the Earle budget figures for relief by pinning ruthlessly to weed out "chiselers" receiving governmental aid. The administration, anticipating collapse of its original tax program in the Senate, was at work preparing new substitute taxes. Spokesmen would not reveal their nature but denied a sales tax was on the list.

The House had a brief calendar of routine bills before it, providing a brief respite after completing its work on the Governor's tax program.

county is to have another internationally distinguished home-owner in

"The Good Earth," which won for her
the Pulitzer Prize several years ago,

Mrs. Bucks and her minister-missionary husband who spent considerable time in China with his wife, will go to farming and write on an historic farm in Hilltown township, near Dublin, Bucks county, five miles north of here.

They bought the former Blooming-er farm from Ira Derstine, Blooming-er realtor, six months ago, but it was not learned until yesterday when the purchase of the place. The house has been remodeled and will be occupied by the Bucks in the near future as a permanent home.

Highway Patrolmen Rush Serum to Rahway Victim

SOUTH LANGHORNE, Mar. 27.—
State Highway Patrolman Lewis Paterson made a quick run yesterday
from the Temple Hospital, Philadelphia, with serum for a patient in a hospital at Rahway, N. J. Patrolman Patterson took the serum from Temple Hospital to the Calhoun street bridge at Morrisville.

Mrs. Irene Butler, Rahway, was admitted to a hospital in that city a sufferer with septic poisoning. Her condition became serious and police of that city asked the New Jersey State Police to have a trooper rush the serum.

HAUPTMANN IS WILLING TO SUBMIT TO LIE DETECTOR

If Results Proved Him Truth-
ful It Would Be Basis
For New Trial

WIFE HAS TEST MADE

TRENTON, N. J., Mar. 27.—(INS)— Bruno Richard Hauptmann "will be glad to submit" to a lie detector test
as to his guilt or innocence, Egbert Rosenkranz, one of his attorneys said
today.

Hauptmann, doomed to forfeit his life in the electric chair at the State Prison here on the convicted slayer of the Lindbergh child, "would be shown to be telling the truth," Rosenkranz said.

If such a test were made, and the detector showed his client to be telling the truth, the attorney continued,
the result would be used as the basis
for an application for a new trial.

The comments on the lie detector test came from Rosenkranz after he learned Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, at present on a lecture tour of the Middle West, had submitted herself to such a test at Northwestern University's crime detecting school, in Chicago, yesterday.

"It's marvelous. We've got to use it for Richard," Mrs. Hauptmann is reported to have said after the test.

Speaking in Atlantic City last night,
assistant attorney general Robert I.
Peacock, who assisted in the prosecution of Hauptmann at Flemington, said Hauptmann would die in the electric chair, as he was sure the conviction would be affirmed upon appeal.

"Bruno Richard Hauptmann," Peacock said, "is more guilty than the public knew."

Governor Gets Bill

HARRISBURG, Mar. 27.—Continued relief for depressed property owners was promised today as concurrence of the Senate sent to Governor Earle's desk the Wasserman House Bill authorizing the Common Pleas Court to stay writs of execution and tax sales of real estate during the next two years. The bill continued in effect, emergency legislation passed in 1933
under which Courts were authorized to postpone foreclosures and other writs where property owners could demonstrate payments were impossible because of difficulties arising from the depression.

To Confer With Governor

HARRISBURG, Mar. 27.—Members of the Republican Senate Constitutional Committee were to confer with Governor George H. Earle today on the administration's Constitutional Revision Bill. This was the latest development in the dispute over the Senate's handling of the Rife revision bill. Arrangements for the meeting collapsed
yesterday when Republicans refused to attend following the Senate's refusal to discharge the Committee from further consideration of the bill. After the conference with the executive, another meeting of the committee was to be held, but Chairman E. Mason Owl-

for another two weeks.

UPPER SOUTHAMPTON SCHOOL PRINCIPAL WRITES IN INTERESTING VEIN RELATIVE TO TRICENTENNARY CELEBRATION OF FOUNDING OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Bucks County Has the Distinction of Having Established First Academy South of New England for Education of Prospective Ministers

In the current issue of The Bucks County School Review F. Eugene
Klinger, supervising principal, Upper Southampton, writes an interesting story under the heading "Glimpse Into the History of High Schools in Bucks."
The article follows:

This year marks the Tricentennial
Celebration of the founding of the first Secondary School in America, the Boston Latin School. Bucks County has the distinction of having established
the first academy, or Secondary School,
south of New England, for the education of prospective ministers. This is the famous "Log College" which was located in the neighborhood of Warwick Township. Semi-public in then public high schools came in due course.

One of the earliest academies in Bucks County was the Andrew McMin-Advanced School established in 1772 at Newtown. This was followed in 1798 by the Bucks County Academy, likewise located in Newtown. This Academy received a state appropriation of $4000, and a charter provided that at least ten poor pupils should be educated free of charge each year. In 1804
the Union Academy was established in Doylestown, as a private school until 1827 and as a corporation from 1827 to 1849. Porter's Academy, 1806, a private school for men, existed in Newtown for a period of 15 years.

One of, if not the earliest, public high schools in Bucks County was established in Bristol, December, 1837,
and was designated as the Bristol Common School. Surveying, Trigonometry, Mensuration, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy and Orthography were among the courses offered by this institution which boasted of an average enrollment of 120 in the boys' department.
The principal, James Anderson, was employed for a term of 10 months at a salary of $650.

Doylestown accepted the Free School
Law about 1850, at which time the old Union Academy was turned over by the trustees for public school purposes.
During this same year a school tax of 24 mills was levied in the county seat, netting the school authorities $1013.57.

In 1853 the Cottage School at Newtown housed the first strictly public high school of that borough. In 1872 the first building of the present Newtown school system was built and housed a two-year high school. In 1915 Newtown became a four-year high school.

Quakertown High School was established in the fall of 1881 and provided an academic course of three years. The ment totaling three. In 1917 Quaker-town offered the fourth year.

Sellersville High School opened in 1886 with a three-year course. Perksie High School entered the field of secondary education in 1895 with a course similar to that of Sellersville. In 1914 Perksie added the fourth year and in 1920 Sellersville and Perkase combined to form their present High School unit.

The autumn of 1892 marked the beginning of the Morrisville High School with an enrollment of twenty pupils.
The entire teaching consisted of six members, including the Supervising Principal, and proved sufficient for Morrisville's needs from 1894 to 1906.

Richboro High School opened its doors as a two-year high school in 1896 and so continued until 1913 when a third year was added to the school.
The fourth year was added in 1928
during the principalship of Charles H.
Boehm.

The first class to graduate from Fallsington High School emerged in 1897 and numbered two. Fallsington

Senate Defeats Earle's Gasoline Tax Program

HARRISBURG, Mar. 27.—(INS)—Ignoring a personal plea from Governor George H. Earle, the Republican majority in the Senate today defeated the administration's gasoline tax bill, $40-000,000 foundation of Governor Earle's
sweeping tax program.

The vote, rigidly following party lines, was 28 to 17 against the measure. Defeat of the bill after a brief partisan debate, was a crushing setback for the Governor, and was accepted as an indication of the Republican majority's attitude toward the remainder of the 22-point revenue program.

The Governor's plea, delivered personally from the rostrum of the upper branch in a last-minute precedentshattering appearance, still rang in the ears of the Senators as they cast the final vote on the measure which aroused a storm of opposition throughout the State.

for the body of Livio Aizerez, 29-year-old high school star athlete, following the discovery of the youth's overcoat containing a suicide note, on the river pier. The note indicated the youth, who disappeared Monday, had quarreled with his sweetheart. It read: "I make a lot of slips in my life but believe me I didn't mean what I said.
Good-bye, you didn't think I would

Parents' Night Conducted By Boy Scout Troop Seven

Bristol Troop No. 7 held its weekly meeting in its meeting room, Pitzonka's Pansy Farm, Monday evening. A special program was arranged for parents of the Scouts and their friends. Many attended, including some boys from Troop No. 1, accompanied by their Scoutmaster, Mr.
Mountney.

The meeting was brought to order by roll call, collection of dues and pledge of allegiance. Following this a few musical selections were offered by Johnny Zepp and his orchestra.
The different members of the Committee were then introduced by the Troop Chairman, Walter W. Pitzonka, who gave a short talk on the fine work being done by them. At this point a new member was invested into the Troop. The new Scout is Joseph Brehaut and will be a member of the Eagle Patrol. A few stunts were put on by the boys, followed by several of their songs. Several more selections were rendered by the orchestra
and the meeting closed by everyone singing "America," and benediction by the Scoutmaster, H. C. Prevost.

A delightful evening was enjoyed by everyone and the fine attendance

LANGHORNE SCOUTS WIN HIGHEST RANK IN YARDLEY MEET

Troop Scores a Total of 26
Points in Big Competition

MORRISVILLE IS SECOND

S. Langhorne Takes Honors
For Third Place With 13 Points

YARDLEY, Mar. 27.—Langhorne added another district championship to its long list of Delaware Valley District victories when it took first place in the Scoutcraft Championship Meet at Yardley on Monday evening.
Scoutmaster Harold D. R. Crumrine inspired and guided his troop to a total of 26 points, with four first places, one second place, and three third places to win the victory. The Langhorne troop thrilled the spectators, at the conclusion of the events, by its exhibition drill, under the capable leadership of Commander, Senior Patrol Leader William Hager, and Patrol Leader Finnis Whittam. It was a fine display of young man leadership under very exciting circumstances.

For the first time in the history of the District Meets, Morrisville No. 1, under Scoutmaster William L. Schofield, Jr., took second place through a display of Scouting ability, which gave them a score of 15 points. Third place went to South Langhorne with 13 points, and Yardley was a close fourth with 12 points. Morrisville No. 3 and Newtown had teams with representative scoring in one or more events.

The Odd Fellows' Hall was packed with enthusiastic rooters to cheer on the efforts of their team mates, and friends and relatives interested in the display of Scoutcraft training. The contest this year was unique, by it being partly indoors and partly outdoors. The first two events were of the out-of-door nature, and one of them involved the building of a fire and making an obstacle, and the second event was the ability to follow a trail
in the darkness with only a flashlight.
Both the events are exceptionally desirable in that they develop real ability in the winners, and ingenuity.

Place winners in the various events
included: Cooking, first place, South Langhorne (Vine Hermonson and John Boorse); second place, Morrisville No.
1 (Ed. Johnson and Russell Palmer); third place, Langhorne (Finnis Whit-tam and Nicholas Fizzino). Treasure Hunt, first place, Yardley (R. DeSau);
second place, Yardley (R. DeSau);
third place, Newtown (E. Davis).
Safety, first place, Morrisville No. 1
(Richard Burns); second place, Langhorne (William Hager); third place, Morrisville No. 3 (Harry Miller).
Double Man, first place, Langhorne (Gamble and Andrass); second place,

SPREADING A TALE

From President Roosevelt's recent message condemning what he called the utility companies' propaganda against the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, one must assume that the white house insists that propaganda should be shunned not only by private but by public business as well.

On this assumption, then, it would seem that Ernest K. Lindley would have better served the Roosevelt administration, of which he has been one of the most sympathetic chroniclers, if he had read Fabian Franklin's explanation of the NRA dividend story before writing in Raymond Moley's weekly an article accepting that story at face value. The reference is to that portion of its recent report on The Operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act wherein the research and planning division of the NRA compared incomes from wages with incomes from interest and dividends.

According to that comparison, payrolls in December of last year amounted to only 60 per cent. of the aggregate for 1926, but dividends and interest payments of corporations to 150 per cent. of 1926. Mr. Franklin, among those puzzled, began a research for himself. He found that the NRA research division credited its data on dividends and interest to the publication, Standard Trade and Securities. Referring to that publication, he found a table of such payments "tucked away in a small fraction of a single page" and credited to the New York Journal of Commerce. Subsequent to Mr. Franklin's disclosure of his findings, the Journal of Commerce explained in an editorial that more corporations now make public their dividend payments than was the case in 1926, so that the number of corporations now represented in the Journal's dividend statistics is larger than a decade ago. The Journal added that its figures were "never presented as an absolute index of the total" of all dividend payments and "can not be used for this purpose."

Since it is always hard to catch up with incorrect reports, it would seem that the NRA's division of research would be most painstaking to issue only reports from which can be spread no tales that will have to be caught up with.

SPINSTERS BEST DRIVERS?

An insurance company which recently studied the risks existing in insuring different classes of automobile drivers, decided that the lowest rates should be given unemployed and unmarried women more than 26 years old. What reason is there in the status of such women, why they should be better risks as drivers?

Some people may say that there are always risks in marriage, so that the people who remain unmarried have shown an extra sense of caution. Or it might be claimed that many unmarried women have always lived at home, which may tend to cultivate qualities of prudence. Whether there is anything in those arguments or not, cautious people are the ones who avoid accidents.

There is much debate as to whether women or men are better drivers. But the majority of women are courteous, and courteous people rarely get into difficulty.

If Sir Malcolm said that at 276 m. p. h. one can't see the billboards, there would be some point to it all.

"More Money"

CHAPTER XXXI

"If I walk out of here without your money, I'll walk straight to a newspaper editor and tell him my story, that's what I'll do," said Joe. "You haven't got a story—nothing any paper would print. But if you had, are you crazy? You're Cathleen's brother, what would you want to throw mud on her name for?"

"Sure, I'm crazy," Joe admitted desperately. "I owe money. I'm in all around, and so I thought of you. I'd rather get it some other way than putting Cathleen's name in the paper . . . but I got to get it somehow. If you won't come through, I'll go out and do a real stick-up!"

"Well, I'm not going to be black-mailed, and that's that," said Seward.

Suddenly, Joe plunged his hand into his coat and brought out a pistol. "Now, will you sit down and write me a check for five thousand bucks?"

"Don't be a damned fool, McCarthy. Write you a check now and telephone the bank the first thing tomorrow to stop payment on it? What would that get you? And it may surprise you to learn that I haven't got five thousand in the bank either, or anywhere."

Joe heard a sound behind him and whirled. Seward sprang forward and jerked up his wrist, and the husky menial who had thought it advisable to reconnoitre on hearing a threatening voice raised in the little reception room, easily twisted the revolver from Joe's grasp and then took a firm grip himself on the boy's collar.

"I'll hold him, sir, while you telephone for the police!"

"Nothing like that, Patterson," Seward said. "He was only kidding. There's such a thing as carrying a joke too far, though. Just show him out, will you?"

Seward was glad his father and mother were dining out. He cut his own meal short and ordered his car around. He had to see Cathleen.

It was true that he had apologized to her already and she had forgiven him, in the obligatory humanitarian form that brings so little comfort to the offender. Now he should ask and expect a different form of forgiveness. Now he understood a little of what the poor girl had to struggle with at home. Now he would make her promise to turn to him whenever she was in any trouble.

She had said that rich and poor couldn't be friends. Well, Cathleen's friendship was not his objective—her love was that! And nobody has ever said that rich and poor can not love and marry. The thing has been done since King David married the beggar maid.

The discrepancy, if you admit the importance of it at any time, ends with marriage, when the poor one of the couple becomes rich, too.

Seward knew that luxury could never be important to Cathleen, but he thought wistfully that it would be fun to give her things, sapphire rings, diamonds that she wouldn't get angry about and shut back at him.

He remembered, as he drew up in front of her house, that she had asked him not to come to her home. He'd made a little joke about that, something about not having money to obey her yet, about how she'd mind after they were married.

He had no opportunity to make a joke. He had no sooner given his name to the girl of thirteen or fourteen who opened the door, than a sort of bellows issued from the archway on the right, and a moment later a grizzled shirt-sleeved man, who might have been handsome if his face had not been turkey-red, appeared there.

"Mr. Seward Ingram, is it—and you dare to step foot in this house?" "Yes, I do, Mr. McCarthy! You've got me all wrong, I—"

"It was not us that began the wrong! Ye took the girl away from her home and kept her through the night, and she's not in this house that such goings-on will be overlooked while I'm the master of it!"

"Are they all crazy?" Seward wondered. "I want to talk to Cathleen! Where is she?"

"She's where she belongs; in the kitchen washing the dishes. She's a poor man's daughter, and she should never have had traffic with the likes of you. Can you not find a society young lady to marry or some Broadway girl . . . without bothering after our Cathleen?"

"A rather sweet-faced woman, Cathleen's mother, no doubt, thought Seward, came out into the hall. She tried to speak and was drawn out by McCarthy. In any event, she was not on Seward's side, for the few words he caught were "shouldn't have come—" and "done harm enough—"

The small girl who had let him in stood looking at him with solemn eyes.

Seward wondered if he should ever be able to get fond of his family-in-law, but he did not weaken on the main point, that there was to be an alliance between him and them. He was struggling to say something that should appease them, when a door at the back of the hall opened, and Cathleen came through it, her face almost as red as her father's.

"Didn't I beg of you not to come here?" she cried.

He could have faced her family alone, he thought, and he only asked to face Cathleen alone. But he could not face them together, could not plead with her across their hostile clamor, nor silence it by declaring his wish to marry her, before he had won any encouragement from her.

Confused and mortified, he moved backward towards the front door. "I'm sorry," he said. And he let himself out ignominiously while Patrick McCarthy rumbled, and the others stared in silence.

But as Seward was getting into his car, a slight short figure darted around the house and crossed the sidewalk to him.

"Please don't mind dad, Mr. Ingram!" Mary cried. "He's just terribly old-fashioned. Cathy told me all about why you couldn't get back that night, and I think you're a very nice man, and so does she!"

"Oh, she does, does she?" Seward said. "What makes you think so?"

"Because she said so, she said she liked you awfully. I'm sure she's feeling just terribly, to have you come here and get treated like this!"

"Do you know what I think?" he asked. "I think the girls in your family are a great improvement on the males. I think you're swell and I know you and I are going to be buddies!"

"Well, what chance is there of me ever seeing you again, when they won't let you come to the house!" she cried.

"You never know! You might get a big surprise one of these days," Seward said, raising his hat to her surprise and pride, as he started his engine.

But as he drove slowly away fragments of things Joe had said in the course of their recent interview came back to him disturbingly.

The boy had made it fairly plain that he was desperate for money. Seward began to be sorry now that the interview had ended as it had. He ought to have helped Joe for Cathleen's sake, and he wondered where he could get hold of the boy. It seemed improbable that he was in the house with the others, for if he had been he would hardly have failed to appear.

Seward drew to the curb, half-way between Cathleen's gate and the Elevated line, and prepared to wait and have another talk with Joe.

Time was nothing to Seward now, with the fascinating and inexhaustible subject of Cathleen to think about. Cathleen, just glimpsed after long weeks of separation, more adorable than ever in her rosy, surprised dismay. Cathleen, who had told her sister that she liked him awfully—and should tell himself that, and more than that, if he never managed to get her alone.

It was growing late before he gave up hope of seeing Joe, and drove away. Next day he'd find the boy, he determined, and see what could be done to help him out of his difficulty.

In the future, motion pictures may

Dr. Royal Sorenson, of the Caliamounts of energy.

"This energy will be recorded on film just as sound is recorded, now,"

declares the scientist. "The amount of energy will depend upon the amount of light striking the film's negative.

"In appearance, the developed film

will closely resemble a cardograph

with millions of minutely shaded lines, too fine to be determined by the naked eye. These minute lines will be energy, and they will be recorded at a central laboratory and shipped to small towns and com-

According to the doctor, the energy will then be projected on

BEHIND THE SCENES AT HARRISBURG

HARRISBURG, Mar. 27.—While the voters of Democratic Pike county were repudiating the Democratic Administration's tax program at the polls in the special legislative election last week, by sending a Republican legislator to Harrisburg, Guffey's handyman, "Dave" Lawrence, was whipping reluctant Democrats into line for the Governor's burdensome tax bills.

The extent to which the Democratic bosses were willing to go is illustrated by an incident during the debate. Representative Robert Woodside, of Dauphin, a Republican, had just finished making a very reasonable plea for an amendment to the amusement tax bill, exempting school and church entertainments.

Representative Eugene A. Caputo, a Democrat, leaped to his feet and shouted: "If we don't tax the schools and we don't tax the churches who in are we going to tax?"

That's a very fair sample of the Democratic tax debate.

As the Democrats were about to put the stamp of approval on their tax legislation, Representative Morton Witkin, Republican floor-leader, arose and said, in reply to a Democrat who had been worrying about next session: "I have just heard that a Republican legislator has been elected in Pike county. The issue there was solely the Democratic tax program now on trial before the voters. If you Democrats keep on voting for these tax bills you won't need to worry about two years hence. You won't be here."

But not all those who ordinarily support Democratic measures could swallow the Democratic tax dose. Representative Hiram G. Andrews, of Cambria, denounced the whole program and declined to have anything to do with it. And the public utility tax bill was too raw for even Darlington Hoopes, Socialist, who spoke and voted against it. Hoopes is ordinarily a violent utility opponent.

Some inkling of how leading Republican members of the State Senate are thinking about taxes may be gleaned from an address made by Senator Mason G. Owlett, of Tioga, before the Tax Justice League of Pennsylvania, at a meeting in this city.

Owlett, one of the outstanding members of the upper house, said "the forgotten men in Pennsylvania are the farmers and small home owners."

Promising support for a graduated income tax for school tax relief, in order to lift partially the burden on farmers and home owners, Senator Owlett continued:

"The sum thus raised, however, would be entirely inadequate to afford the relief to which farm and home owners are entitled, because it would mean a reduction of only about ten per cent. in local school taxes throughout the State."

"In the existing emergency," he continued, "business and industrial enterprises should pay their fair share of the estimated sums necessary, over and above what they have had to pay in normal times."

Regarding a general sales tax Senator Owlett said: "I am in favor of a general consumers' sales tax to be applied, first, to relief and the necessary expenses of State government, and secondly, to the further support of the public school system, so that together with the amount realized from an income tax, the owner of real estate will get substantial and not merely nominal relief from his tax burdens."

Republican campaigners last fall drew attention to the heavy government loans and other governmental favors extended to Maine farmers in an effort to swing that State to the Democratic party. They pointed out that Pennsylvania farmers were discriminated against by the Democratic Administration and would suffer. They knew that under the circumstances Maine potato growers had been encouraged to plant enormous crops.

Now comes the sequel, as reported by Norman Gage in his widely syndicated column, "Pencil-Vania," in which he says:

"Back of the Emergency Relief Administration's sudden decision to buy Pennsylvania potatoes is a significant, if not thrilling, story."

"The SERA announcements said merely that arrangements had been made to purchase 18,000 bushels from farmers in counties reporting a surplus. They had a casual, un-heroic tone. There was nothing to stamp the incident for what it is—a part of a desperate, belated effort to save Pennsylvania's potato market and millions of dollars for Pennsylvania farmers."

"While politicians and legislators have been yelling loudly for farm and real estate relief, Pennsylvania potato growers have been taking a beating from competitors in other States.*** Maine growers took over the chain store market. Even the SERA, spending Pennsylvania and federal money to feed the unemployed, was buying Maine grown potatoes while millions of bushels of the State's own crop went begging, threatened with the ultimate fate of rotting or being fed to cattle."

In other words, potatoes grown on the strength of government loans to the farmers of Maine were being sold in Pennsylvania, while products grown by Pennsylvania farmers with their own money were being left unsold. Unfortunately the rescue work, staged after most of the Maine crop has been sold, comes too late for Pennsylvania farmers.

Robot Plane Promises to Revolutionize Aviation

Robot "mystery" plane.

Automatic compass.

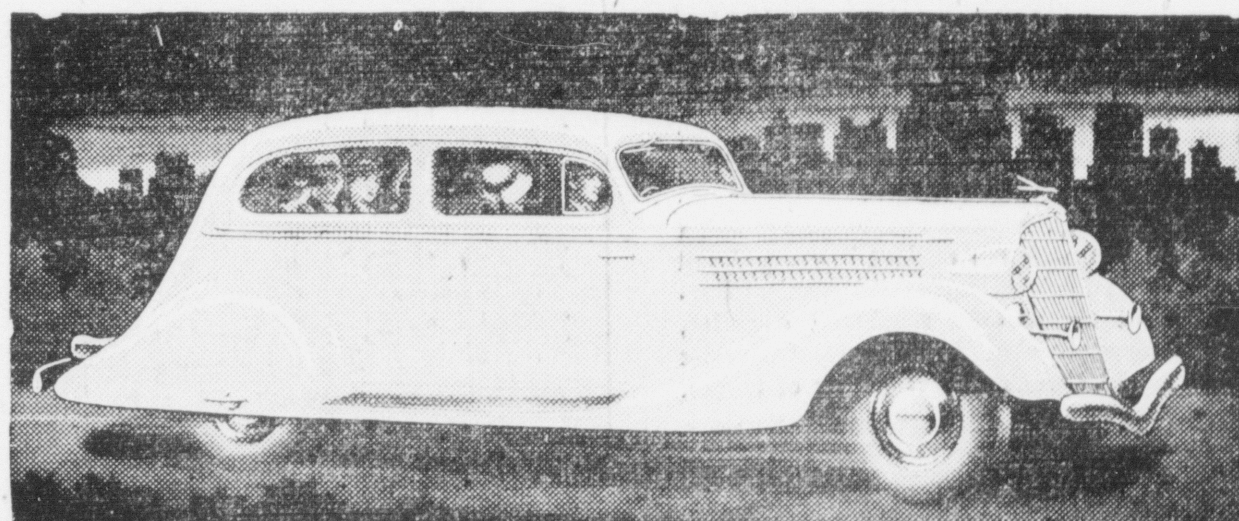

Major Chester Snow

Captain Clayton Bissell

International interest has been aroused by the government's new "mystery" plane and its robot pilot. Recent test flights have proven the practical dependability of the device. Government officials are now awaiting a break in weather before sending the ship on its epochal flight to Hawaii. The robot pilot enables the aviator to set the course without having his hands on the controls. The "pathfinder" is one of the jealously guarded secrets of the navy. It is a hoop-like affair which enables the pilot to chart his course from instructions broadcast by radio compass sending stations. When the plane strays from its course, the fact is recorded by the "pathfinder" which registers when the radio waves are deflected by the wrong angle of the ship. Many ships have seen the plane in flight.

"---as advertised"

HOW many times you see those two words in the course of a day's shopping: "This article for sale—as advertised."

And those two words are as welcome as they are familiar, for they form a bond of confidence between the merchant and yourself. They are his guarantee to you of worth and value.

Here is an article that has been described in your newspaper. Its merits have been told; possibly, too, its price. You know exactly what you will get when you buy it. You know its quality, its utility; you know how it fits into your needs. And when you buy it, you know you are getting not some unproved substitute but the specified article—as represented.

It is easy to understand why that phrase, "as advertised," creates a feeling of confidence. You have learned to depend upon consistently advertised products. You know that the maker has confidence in them, else he would not spend money calling your attention to them day after day, and month after month. You know that they have been approved by the most critical of investigators—the buying public. And above all you know from experience that buying goods "as advertised" is the best investment you can make.

FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS WAIT NEXT MOVES OF "LAWRENCE OF ARABIA," WHO LEAVES HIS HUMBLE PLACE IN R. A. F. STILL MYSTERY MAN

By Charles A. Smith
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
LONDON, Mar. 27.—(INS.—) What next, Aircraftman Thomas Edward Shaw?

Many people throughout the world, including not a few officials of foreign governments, have been asking this question since "Lawrence of Arabia," who changed his name to Shaw in 1927, quit his place as a humble aircraftman in Britain's Royal Air Force.

Officially he has gone into retirement in Dorset County, in southwest England, where several years ago he purchased a small country cottage. Officially, also, he no longer is on the books of his Majesty's many government departments.

But few of the people who know him really well, who are aware of his restless mind and body, of his craving for things mechanical, and of his delight in speeding ashore and afloat, are ready to believe that the world's headlines have seen the last of this short, keen-featured man. They cannot believe that he will remain content for long with his self-chosen country life, buried away in a cottage eight miles from the nearest small town.

They point out, for example, that the training ground of the Royal Tank Corps is only a few miles away, and that Lawrence, or Shaw, was once a private in the self-same corps and has retained his love for tanks and their complicated machinery.

They mention that he still has his beloved motor cycle, on the pillion of which once rode the great George Bernard Shaw, after whom the wartime desert conqueror is said to have named himself, and that it would only mean a matter of a half-hour ride should Lawrence desire to continue his active interest in tanks once more.

Since Lawrence took leave of his commanding officer at the Bridlington R. A. F. station a few days ago all the old stories of his alleged, mysterious subrosa activities on behalf of the British Government have again crept into circulation.

But whatever truth there may be in these stories, Lawrence himself is saying nothing. His attitude is summed up by the inscription in stone over the doorway of his Dorset County cottage, chiseled in Greek letters, the inscription means "Not your concern," that is, "Don't bother me." He has had the same attitude since he rejected high honors after the war to submerge himself in a humble place in the army.

"I have made no plans for the future, and I am leaving it to take care of itself," was his sole comment when he took leave of aircraftmen at Bridlington after a glorious night at the local theater and hotel on which Lawrence expended most of his discharge gratuity.

The last Bridlington people saw of him was when he peddled rapidly through the town on a low-built, racing-type bicycle, dressed in a blue jersey, a tweed coat, a woolen scarf and a pair of gray flannel pants. Slung on the carrier of the machine was his meager baggage.

"Eventually I shall reach my country home in Dorset, but it may be a month before I arrive there," Lawrence told his commanding officer. "I'm going to cycle each day and sleep each night in some pleasant village which appeals to me. I'm sorry to be leaving the R. A. F. but I'm happy in the thought I shall be having 'real freedom at last'."

Lawrence's cottage is hidden away in the wilderness of Moreton Heath—immortalized by novelist Thomas Hardy as Egdon Heath. It is eight miles from Dorchester and located down a side road, nearly hidden in a dip in the ground.

It is an old cottage, with buff-colored walls, red-brown tiled roof, hooded with dormer windows. Thick rhododendron bushes surround it, and its entrance is through a gap in these.

A winding path leads to the door at the rear of the house, and a trim lawn faces the front of the cottage. A finely wrought iron knocker with a leaf design is virtually the sole exterior decoration.

A large glass conservatory has been converted into a swimming bath by the colonel, who has fixed up an ingenious arrangement whereby the bath is fed by a spring.

He will have to cycle to Dorchester for his shopping. A few scattered cottages and bungalows will provide him with his sole neighbors.

But the colonel who fomented the revolt of the desert tribes and won the Near East for the Allies during the war is not expected to stay for any length of time at his cottage. The betting is even that he will have found himself a new job within a few months. With war clouds hovering, there is natural speculation over what it will be.

In the meantime he is expected to occupy himself with writing a new book for private circulation among his friends. He himself has been the subject of several books and scores of friends, and his own previous books have been best-sellers both abroad and at home.

COMMUNICATION

Cornwells Heights,
March 23, 1935.

Editor Courier:

After reading a statement of Dr. John A. Flood in your paper, dated March 21, 1935, in regards to the protest meeting held in the Union Fire House, State Road, Cornwells Heights, Sunday, March 17, 1935, protesting the removal of Charles Gilbert as acting postmaster, let me state for the benefit of the people of Bucks County, that it is not up to Gilbert to make public what the irregularities of his office were. To begin with Mr. Gilbert had nothing to do with the petition of 400 voters of Cornwells Heights, nor did he have anything to do with the meeting, or was he present at this meeting. It was Dr. John A. Flood who threatened to read these facts before the people at this meeting which he was unable to do. As I stated before in your paper of March 29th, the meeting was called at the suggestion of Dr. John A. Flood, chairman of the Bucks County Democratic committee. Now, I challenge Dr. Flood to make public these irregularities, and not "throw the mess" into Mr. Gilbert's lap as he said about the letter that I presented at the meeting when he (Dr. Flood) stated that it was up to Congressman Frey, Frey saying it was up to Dr. Flood whether the change was to be made or not.

I want to answer Dr. Flood about the "riff" question. Dr. Flood, why was Mr. Gilbert permitted to hold the postmastership from August, 1934, until March 16, 1935, as you stated that you received a letter from W. W. Howes, first assistant to the postmaster general at Washington, D. C., stating that Mr. Gilbert had to be removed if he was inefficient? I would like you as county chairman to state to the people why he wasn't removed before election time last Fall. Dr. Flood, for your information, you and John Montgomery, Bensalem Township chairman of the Democratic committee, are the cause of the rift in Cornwells Heights. If you were a good commanding officer there wouldn't be any rift here, but when you ignored 400 people in one little village in the manner in which you did, what else could you expect. If you continue to tell people that they are not telling you what to do, there won't be many Democrats left for you to command, as you know this is still a free country; and if you don't want to take care of the people's wants you are not going to last long.

Now, Dr. Flood, I want to quote to you something that may help you somewhat. Abraham Lincoln once said: "You can fool some of the people some of the time; you can fool some of the people all of the time; but you can't fool all of the people all of the time."

When I asked you at the meeting whether John Barron had been appointed acting postmaster, you said you didn't know, but he had been appointed 32 hours at that time. Well, Dr. Flood, you can't fool all the people all the time.

H. LINCOLN HUGHES.

ATTRACTIVE LYNCHBURG RUGS CAN BE MADE RIGHT IN THE HOME

By Rhondana A. Armstrong
Home Economics Representative

With simple equipment and discarded materials, hooked rugs can be made in the home. Very little expense is involved, labor being the chief item.

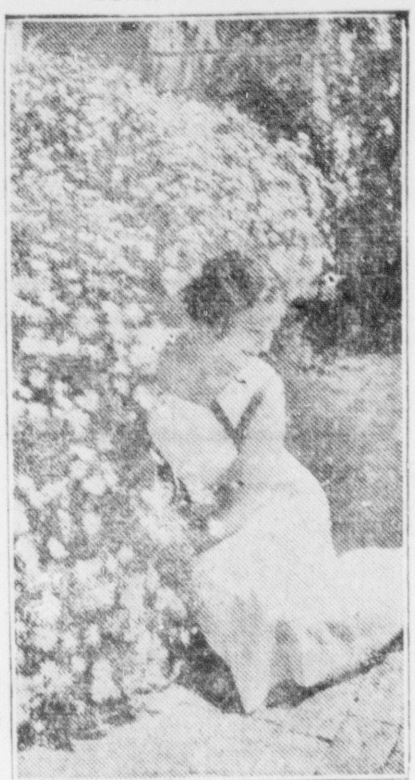

Equipment needed consists of a hook and a frame. The hook may be bought or home-made. Purchased hooks are of two kinds; one is a steel needle resembling a crochet hook with a wooden handle and the other is an art needle which regulates the length of the loop. The home-made one can be fashioned by a blacksmith from a 10 to 20-penny nail. Four pieces of light-weight wood about 2 inches wide and 1 inch thick are required for the frame. The two end pieces should be 18 to 27 inches long and the two side pieces 40 to 50 inches long. They can be put together and adjusted like a quilting frame. A similar frame may be mounted on a firm standard which will permit the worker to sit comfortably while hooking the rug.

Burlap with a pattern is used as the foundation of the rug. The design should be simple and may be drawn, stamped, or stenciled on the foundation. The foundation should be 3 to 4 inches larger on every side than the pattern. It is fastened to the frame by sewing over the frame, care being used to make it smooth and tight.

Cotton or woolen hosiery and light-weight woolen materials, such as jersey, challis, and flannel are the best materials. Woolen yarns from old sweaters can be washed and used.

Detailed information on the method of making the rug may be obtained at my office in Doylestown.

"STAR" GARDENER

Sylvia Sidney Displays a Plant of Pyrethrum Growing Luxuriantly in Her Hollywood Garden.

WHAT IS THE MOST PRACTICAL ANNUAL?

What is the most practical annual that can be grown? This question has aroused interesting discussion in garden club circles. Most gardeners agree that the most practical annual is the one that gives the most flowers over the longest period for the least effort.

But there are varying opinions. The purpose for which a plant is grown is a basic point in the discussion, whether for garden display, for cutting or a combination of both. For garden display the proponderance of date seems to favor the petunia. It gives more bloom over a longer period with less trouble than any other annual, but is not so good for cutting.

For a combination of display and cutting, over a long blooming season, the zinnia seems to be high in favor. Close to the zinnia comes the marigold; objection to its narrow color range of yellow, orange and brown red being made by some; but color is a matter of personal taste. Shirley and other annual poppies are much in favor, but objections are their very short season of bloom and the difficulty in using them for cutting material. For cut flowers alone, the aster is highly regarded.

All these are annuals that every garden should have. They come in a great variety of form, coloring and height. The zinnia ranges from little button flowers to giant rivals of the dahlia. The marigold varies from the huge flowers of yellow supreme and guinea gold to the tiny little flowers that spangle the ferny foliage of the dwarf tagetes signata pumila.

Other annuals highly favored for cutting are scabiosa and salpiglossia. Annual larkspurs are highly recommended for cutting, and are highly decorative in the border.

Your selection of annuals should be based both on values for cutting and display. Some are of little value for cutting but highly decorative. Others are magnificent material for cutting. Both kinds are needed in the well balanced garden. Each year sees new colors and improved types in fine annuals worthy of trial.

LOWER BUCKS LEAGUE MEETS TOMORROW NIGHT

By T. M. Juno

The first meeting of the Lower Bucks County Baseball League will be held tomorrow night in the Hibernian Hall, Corson street. In the absence of President David Landreth, Secretary James Dolan will preside. All members of last season's circuit as well as any team which wishes to join the circuit are requested to get in touch with Secretary Dolan or Thomas Juno.

A meeting of the Bristol Twilight League will be held next week and will be called by Secretary Thomas Juno. All clubs wishing to enter this loop must see an official of the league.

There is a possibility of combining the two circuits and having one strong league but this will not be acceptable unless the directors of the circuit deem it necessary.

Several clubs of the Bristol Suburban League are anxious to enter the Bristol Twilight League loop but must stand in line as the league rules give the first preference to the Young Italians baseball team.

Just as a deviation from baseball—The St. Ann's A. A. football team has entered the Northeast Philadelphia Tournament and will play its first game on Sunday, meeting the Almond Bulldogs. The game will be played on the 'Trojans' field, Frankford avenue and Devereaux street.

The St. Ann's A. A. basketball team will play in the semi-finals of the Passen basketball tournament tomorrow night. Its opponent is unknown at the present time.

Another Bristol basketball team, the Furnan A. C., did not fare so well in the Middle Atlantic Amateur Athletic association tournament, being shelacked by the West Catholic Alumni Club, 25-17.

David Landreth, president of the Bristol Twilight League and Lower Bucks County League, is down south on a business trip. He is not expected back until the week of April 8.

In a letter to the writer, Prexy Landreth thinks the Athletics look good for third position in the American League loop. That is, if "Jimmy" Fox comes through as a catcher, and Al Hooks as a first baseman. According to Dave, Hooks is rather weak as a hitter but a fine fielder.

Landreth claims that the Phillies' pitchers are the best they have had for a long time but doubts that the club will finish in the first division of the National League.

Another sport that will interest the fans this summer is that Italian game called "boce." Three Bristol teams: St. Ann's, Bristol Democratic Club and the Bristol Boce Club, are entered in the Penn-Jersey League.

Speaking of Penn-Jersey, the writer thinks that a baseball league of this sort would be just what the local and nearby fans would go for in a big way.

The week-end was passed by Fred Featherstone, 294 Jefferson avenue, in Passaic, N. J., with relatives.

Germany Stands Fast

Berlin, Germany, Mar. 27—Germany today marched forward to her goal of armed security, leaving squarely up to the western powers the problem of how to initiate real general disarmament.

Britain has speedily accepted the verdict, Sir John Simon, British Foreign Minister, left by air for London to lay before the cabinet the complete fortification of the situation as set forth in his talks with Chancellor Hitler. Captain Anthony Eden, Sir John's chief aide, hurried off to Moscow and will later stop in Warsaw and Prague after his discussions with Red leaders. Then, when Sir John, astute lawyer that he is, has assembled all the "evidence" in the European arms tangle, he will lay before Premier Mussolini of Italy and Foreign Minister Laval of France, stress, April 11th, Britain's idea how international co-operation for peace may best be brought about.

Miners Are Anxious

Pittsburgh, Mar. 27—Thousands of miners in the bituminous coal fields sat on the anxious seat today as negotiations for a new wage scale continued at Washington. If a decision is not reached by midnight Sunday, when old contracts expire, approximately 200,000 united mine workers in western Pennsylvania and northern West Virginia will lay down their tools. An indication that the strike may be averted came from Philip Murray, vice-president of the United Mine Workers, who saw a possibility of an agreement being reached until the last minute.

Trace Rosen

Upper Darby, Mar. 27—Federal Agents from the U. S. Bureau of Investigation at Washington came here today to pick up the trail of Harry (Nig) Rosen, Tommy Leonard and Whitey Cohen, reputed operators of a Delaware County numbers racket ring of numbers racketeers reported The trio, together with their henchmen, are wanted by Philadelphia authorities for alleged connection with a suburbs.

Taking the Big Jump

By BURNLEY

Probably the biggest betting event of all the turf classics is scheduled for this week-end when the Grand National Steeplechase is run off over the historic and exceedingly dangerous Aintree course.

As usual, a big field of crack jumpers will go over the barriers and hazards in quest of the coveted victory, and the reigning favorite in the most uncertain of races is last year's Grand National winner, the celebrated Golden Miller belonging to Miss Dorothy Paget.

Golden Miller has been an odds-on choice to repeat his convincing 1934 triumph in England's most famous international turf event.

Miss Paget's crack entry romped home ten lengths ahead of the field in coping the Grand International Handicap late in February, carrying the top weight of 175 pounds and taking the jumps perfectly over soft and treacherous going.

The turf sport is booming in England these days, with several famous American thoroughbreds pointing for the British racing classics. Twenty Grand, glorious seven-year-old equine veteran belonging to Mrs. Payne Whitney, is already on British soil, preparing to make his debut on his first foreign invasion.

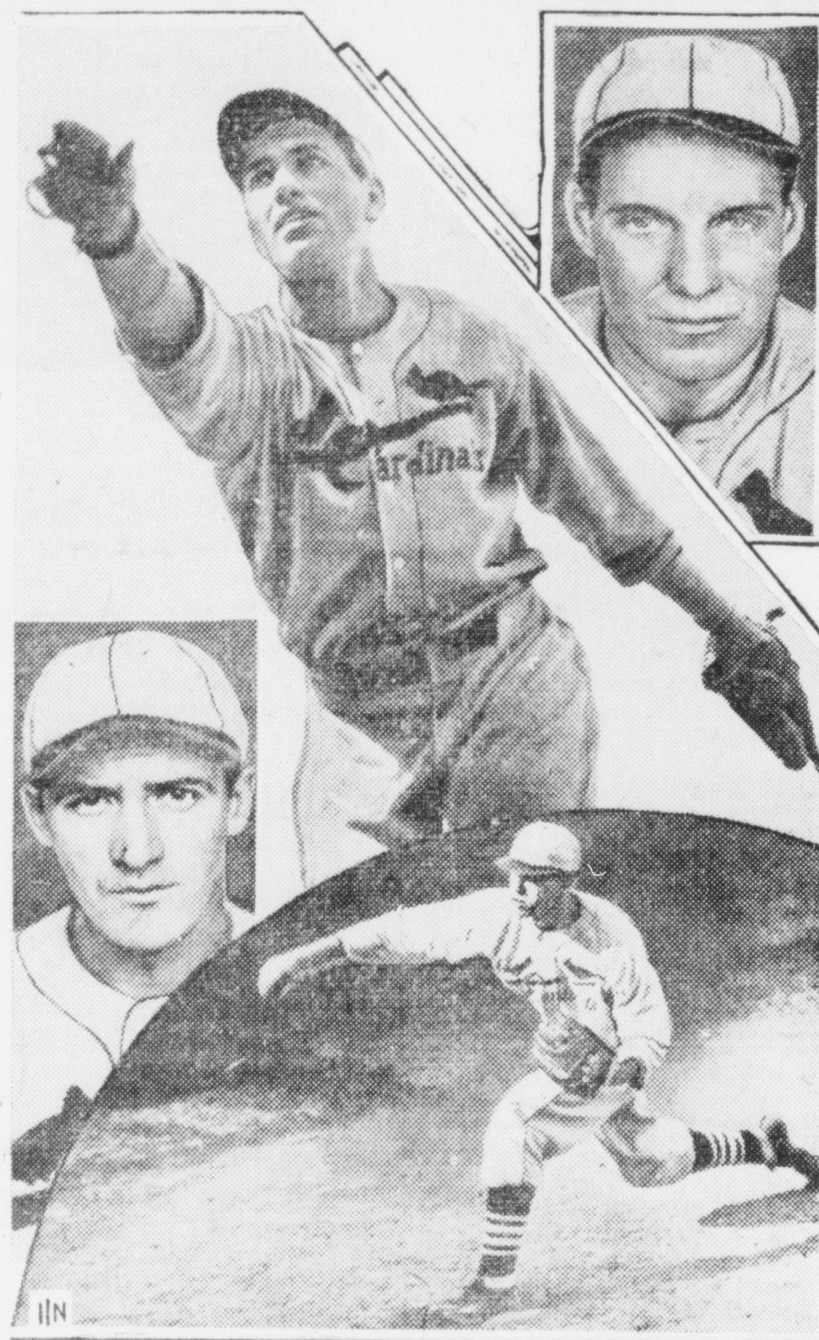

The great Whitney thoroughbred is said to be thoroughly sound, and the excuse given for his failure at Santa Anita is that the hard track did not suit him. If Twenty Grand can approximate his form of three years ago when he races on British turf, he will more than atone for the poor showings made by Mate and other American equine invaders of England.

A future candidate for Grand National Steeplechase honors was uncovered when Azucar (which is Spanish for sugar) hoofed it home to a mighty sweet victory in the richest of all handicaps—the $108,400 Santa Anita Stakes. This sugar baby of the turf is a converted steeplechaser, and owner Fred M. Aker, Jr., plans to start the seven-year-old gelding in the 1935 Grand National.

Meanwhile, Golden Miller stands out over the field in the 1935 Steeplechase, and on form should romp off with the honors again—but nothing is certain in the jumps.

BIG LEAGUE STARS OF 1935

The World Champion Cards enter 1935 season with last year's line-up intact. The outstanding players, are the Dean brothers, Dizzy (top left) and Duffy (lower right), Leo Durocher (top right) and "Ducky" Pond (lower left).

I was working way late at the office one night and ran out of cigarettes. When Jim the watchman came through I tackled him for a smoke.

"Sure," says Jim, and he handed over a pack of Chesterfields. "Go ahead, Mr. Kent, take three or four."

Jim said he'd smoked a lot of cigarettes in his time, but he'd put Chesterfield up in front of any of 'em when it came to taste.

... "and they ain't a bit strong either," is the way Jim put it.

That was the first Chesterfield I ever smoked. And I'm right there with him, too, when he says it's a ding good cigarette.
